European Cohesion Contradictions In Eu

This month marks the end of European Year of Rail 2021. A year that saw a tremendous amount of propaganda on the use of rail transport and its potential role in decarbonisation, such as the replacement of short-distance flights (less than 600km) by trains, the use of railways for territorial cohesion, and for international connections.

The colonial encirclement of the world is an integral component of European history from the Early Modern Period to the phase of decolonisation. Individual national and expansion histories referred to each other in varying degrees at different times but often also reinforced each other. Transfer processes within Europe and in the colonies show that not only genuine colonial powers such as ...

The bizarre confection of panic and lack of lethality that is "Omicron" has essentially laid to rest any rationale for compulsory, mass vaccination. Ursula von der Leyen, President of the European Commission, intoned her disquiet about the "low" vaccination rate of the EU. The "rationale"? There are allegedly "lifesaving vaccines" but they are not being used adequately.

Uncertainty. A common term for describing the future, but 2021 will give it new meaning. The outbreak of the pandemic in 2019 has spread a feeling of vulnerability across the planet. It has changed our daily lives with a speed and intensity that has reminded us of the fragility of what we thought strong and the malleability of what we thought immutable.
